

LOCAL GIRLS WITH BOBBED HAIR HAVE HIGH TIDE MARKS ON THEIR—WELL, YOU READ IT!

Girls with bobbed hair—they have—well, their necks aren't very clean.

Wow! It took a lot of nerve to get that out.

And now the first step is taken, might as well come right out and say it the way we started to: Girls with bobbed hair have—well, anyway, they don't wash their necks often enough.

They have dirty necks.

There it's all out. Phew!

The writer of this here expose hasn't been around peering at necks, either.

A barber told him.

Just who that barber is, the writer refuses to tell, because the barber made him promise. The barber is a married guy and knows that it never gets a man anything to arouse the fury of the women—God bless 'em.

But just the same he says the use of a little more water and a mite more soap might make the feminine neck of 1923 bear up somewhat better under closer scrutiny.

There's a reason for it all, thinks this Knight of the Razor.

"Girls don't like to get their hair wet," he says, "so they don't wash up close to the bob. Men are used to having short hair. (They have been wearing it short since the day Eve pulled Adam's locks.) But women have only surrendered their tresses to the shears these last two or three years.

"So, women—girls, I oughta say—haven't yet been accustomed to washing their necks high.

"There's a high water mark on the feminine neck—like the high tide marks on the cliffs at Laguna Beach.

"Everybody is afraid to tell a girl that her neck is dirty. Because everybody is afraid of girls."

But this barber, being one of the millions who loves 'em all, is passing out the word and warning incognito, as 'twere.

He doesn't say ALL girls with bobbed tresses have dirty necks.

That statement protects him and the writer heretofore.

Because if any girl gets sore and comes in with homicide shining out of her pretty eyes—why, we'll say "Aha! You are mistaken, my dear young lady. The barber didn't mean you. It's the other hussies he was talking about."

She'll be pleased to hear the other girls included, women being that way a little, and our hide and the barber's will be saved.

WELCH NAMED A DIRECTOR OF LOCAL C. OF C.

Succeeds M. R. Osburn Who Resigns By Letter

Brain K. Welch, vice-president and newly elected general manager of the Dominguez Land corporation, was appointed director of the Torrance Chamber of Commerce by the directors Tuesday. His appointment followed receipt of a letter from M. R. Osburn, resigning from the directorate. Mr. Osburn's letter follows:

"To the President and Board of Directors, The Torrance Chamber of Commerce, Torrance, California.

"Gentlemen: I have resigned as president of the Dominguez Land corporation, and am succeeded by Mr. John S. Cravens, a man of exceptional business ability and of very strong standing financially.

"The Dominguez Land corporation, when I took hold of it, was a poor and run-down financial institution. It is now very healthy and is very strong financially. Its lands have practically all been sold or leased for oil, and many wells are already flowing, as you all know.

"As I am going into other work I will consequently not be at Torrance very often, and then perhaps only to attend meetings of the board of directors of the Dominguez Land corporation, of which I continue to be a member. Consequently I will not be able to give the work of the Torrance Chamber of Commerce the attention it should have, and I hereby resign as a member of that board.

"Regretting that I will not see more of you, and wishing you and the citizens of Torrance continued success and prosperity, I am

"Sincerely yours,
"M. R. OSBURN."
